A Chicago Original

Mike Royko was born in Chicago in 1932, and he grew up in the city's working-class Bridgeport neighborhood. He started his journalism career at the Chicago Daily News, and he later moved to the Chicago Tribune, where he spent the rest of his career.

Royko was a prolific writer, and he produced over 7,000 columns during his time at the Tribune. His columns covered a wide range of topics, from politics to sports to the everyday lives of Chicagoans. He was known for his sharp wit, his keen eye for detail, and his ability to connect with readers on a personal level.

Royko was also a fearless critic of corruption and injustice. He was a champion of the underdog, and he was never afraid to speak truth to power. His columns were often controversial, but they were always honest and insightful.

A Master of the Craft

Mike Royko was a master of the craft of journalism. He had a gift for writing clear, concise, and engaging prose. He was also a master of the art of storytelling. He could take a seemingly mundane topic and turn it into a compelling narrative.

Royko's columns were always well-researched and well-argued. He never shied away from expressing his opinions, but he always did so in a fair and balanced way. He was also a master of satire and humor, and he used these tools to great effect in his columns.

A Legacy That Lives On

Mike Royko died in 1997, but his legacy lives on. His columns are still read and enjoyed by millions of people around the world. He is considered one of the greatest columnists of all time, and his work continues to inspire and inform journalists today.

This collection of Royko's columns is a testament to his genius. It is a must-have for any fan of his work, and it is a valuable resource for anyone who wants to learn more about the history of Chicago and the art of journalism.
